Organic farming is the form of agriculture that relies on ecological processes, biodiversity and cycles adapted to local conditions. Organic farmers ensure soil fertility with the help of crop rotation, compost and other biologically induced soil amendments – A healthy soil structure increases its ability to hold water and the plants become better equipped to resist diseases and insects and there is no need to depend on synthetic fertilizers, synthetic pesticides, plant growth regulators, livestock feed additives and genetically modified organisms, all of which are extremely harmful to the plants as well as human beings who consume them.

According to the International Federation of Organic Agriculture Movements : “Organic agriculture combines tradition, innovation and science to benefit the shared environment and promote fair relationships and a good quality of life for all involved ....” In India, the Green Revolution, which was water intensive and involved a heavy dose of chemical fertilizers, has not been a boon. Many farmers have seen the effects of chemical farming – soil erosion and loss of soil nutrients, loss of nutrition in food, and human diseases resulting from the chemicals that seep into the water table. 3
